Have you considered the following when organising transport to your next event?

The pick-up and set-down site?

- Are the sites safe for people to congregate, do you need crowd control?
- Will the coaches be able to wait in position while people are boarding? Do you need traffic control.
- Will the pick up or drop off point allow multiple coaches access? Do you need to stage coaches elsewhere?
- Will you need an on-site coordinator to call up vehicles into position?
- Who will direct people to each coach ensuring that they are boarding quickly, safely and efficiently?

What time of day are you travelling?

- Will you be transporting your guests in peak hour traffic? Do you need to negotiate with the appropriate authorities for changed traffic arrangements to accommodate your need?
- If multiple coaches are required to avoid delays vehicles should travel designed routes to ensure on-time arrival.
- Will it assist if there is communication to the on-site event team and caterers alerting them to each arrival? Remember just one coach is approximately 50 people?

These are just a few of the many points that will be considered in the effective of the transport for your event.
